

Stacey Ravel Abarbanel, staceyra@arts.ucla.edu
310/825-4288

For Immediate Use
December 13, 2007

Fowler Museum at UCLA to present
Make Art/Stop AIDS
February 23-June 15, 2008

Survival, 2003-2005 by Fiona Kirkwood

For more than twenty-five years, artists have joined with activists, medical experts, and others to inspire, provoke, and guide the radical changes that the global AIDS crisis demands. Make Art/Stop AIDS—an internationally traveling exhibition debuting at the Fowler Museum at UCLA on Feb, 23, 2008—shows how artists around the world have responded to HIV/AIDS and how their work can raise awareness, inspire activism, and ultimately help end global AIDS. The exhibition will be on display through June 15, 2008.

Featuring examples from the United States, South Africa, India and Brazil—four disparate nations whose distinct experiences with and responses to the epidemic make insightful studies — Make Art/Stop AIDS presents more than sixty contemporary works including paintings, sculptures, photographs, performance videos, posters, animated shorts, digital media, and installations that engage these questions: What is AIDS? Who lives, who dies? Why are condoms controversial? Are you afraid to touch? When was the last time you cried? Why a red ribbon? Are you ready to act?

“This collection of stunning works from around the world underlines the substantial contribution artists can make in times of crisis. This work is not for auction—it's not intended to raise money for AIDS services or scientific research. Its function, rather, is to intervene in the epidemic by shifting attitudes, educating, mourning, and goading, sometimes all at the same time,” says David Gere, co-curator.

What is AIDS?

Make Art/Stop AIDS opens by exploring how the AIDS epidemic is a socio-cultural phenomenon, shaped by belief, behavior, migration patterns, phobias, and gender-based inequities. Works of art make a significant contribution to defining the epidemic by reminding us that AIDS arises within our complex social worlds—worlds defined by difference, desire, inequality, and sometimes even violence. Included in this section are photographs that depict the various social impacts of AIDS by David Goldblatt, Zanele Muholi, Sunil Gupta, and others, as well as Lennart Nilsson's strangely beautiful scanned electron microscope photograph of HIV, and a large-scale video projection by South African artist Churchill Madikida.

Who lives, who dies?

The next section of the exhibition illustrates how artists have made the political and ethical challenges of treatment a key focus of their work. Gregg Bordowitz's installation Drive, 2003, which includes a line of clocks and the statement "The Aids Crisis is Still Beginning," draws a direct connection between the epidemics in the U.S. and South Africa. Daniel Goldstein's and John Kapella's glittering, life-sized mobile Medicine Man, 2007, made of hundreds of pill bottles and needles, brings into focus the debate over access to life-saving medications. Photographs in this section by Pieter Hugo and David Wojnarowicz boldly address deaths caused by AIDS.

Why are condoms controversial?

When used properly, condoms virtually eliminate the spread of sexually transmitted diseases. Yet some governments and religious institutions continue to argue against the use of condoms, or spread misinformation about their use, such as this past summer when Mozambique's Roman Catholic archbishop accused European condom manufacturers of deliberately infecting their products with HIV. In this section of the exhibition, visitors are asked to ponder why the latex condom—one of the most significant public health inventions of the last century—is so contentious.

Brazilian artist Adriana Bertini's eye-popping hot pink "dress" made entirely of thousands of condoms will be displayed along with Fiona Kirkwood's 24-foot-long installation of men's and women's condoms that spells out the word "Survival." Both pieces promote condom use and open up lines of communication on issues that would otherwise remain taboo. Other works, like the short video Perdão (Forgiveness) by Grupo Gay da Bahia, interrogate how moral dogma restricts access to information and products that can most effectively protect one's health.

Are you afraid to touch?

In reaction to AIDS-related stigma, Indian photographer Dayanita Singh and American artist Sue Coe have focused on the simple act of touching—reinforcing the notion that hugs and handshakes are utterly safe activities. Working in a variety of media, artists whose work is featured in this section invite us to witness compassionate moments between caregivers and those living with or dying from AIDS. Even the tactile art of puppetry is being used to explore AIDS and touch, as evident in the performances on display by the innovative Indian AIDS activist/artist Anurupa Roy.

When was the last time you cried?

In 1993, the arts collective Gran Fury posed four simple questions on posters throughout New York City. The final question, "When was the last time you cried?" brought grief into the public space of their activism, acknowledging mourning as an essential experience of the AIDS epidemic. Given that sexuality and drug use are closely tied to transmission, many view AIDS-related illness and death as a form of punishment. To counteract this view, artists such as Jean Carlomusto, whose installation The Portrait Gallery of AIDS: A Living Archive, 2002 is displayed in this section, offer loving visual records, while other artists have created public performances of grief and mourning, such as Tracy Rhoades' video Requiem.

Why a red ribbon?

In the late 1980s the red ribbon emerged as a direct reference to bureaucratic red tape, alluding subtly and poignantly to the need to speed up the pace of drug trials conducted by the U.S. Food and Drug Administration and to immediately provide experimental treatments for the ill and dying.

Since that time, the tension between ribbon as fashion statement and ribbon as activist symbol has been catalyzed by artists on several continents—making it one of the most recognizable, if perhaps overused, icons in the world. Creative artists continually strive to reinvigorate the symbol or, at the very least, to question its meaning.

This section includes a photograph documenting how community artists in Durban, South Africa wrapped a civic building in a huge red ribbon to demand governmental action, while David Goldblatt's record of faded and tattered red ribbons across that country underscores failed promises to act against the epidemic. Artists in India, meanwhile, reinterpret the ribbon in particularly novel materials, as evident in a display of twenty-one ribbons, ranging from a glitzy profusion of gold and silver to the more humble terracotta.

Are you ready to act?

This final gallery is designed to inspire museum visitors to learn more about the epidemic and to share that knowledge with others. A recreation of Gran Fury's and ACT UP's iconic neon sign SILENCE=DEATH, originally installed at the New Museum of Contemporary Art in 1987, as well as a video installation by the collective Ultra-Red, and other works demonstrate that acts of intervention can take many forms, and ask visitors to consider their own role in this crisis.

Partial list of artists

Adriana Bertini	Fiona Kirkwood
Gregg Bordowitz	José Leonilson Bezerra Dias
Jean Carlomusto	Brenton Maart
Chandannagar Light Collective	Churchill Madikida
Sue Coe	Gideon Mendel
Lewis Evans	Zanele Muholi
General Idea	Lennart Nilsson
Robert Gober	Tracy Rhoades
David Goldblatt	Anurupa Roy
Daniel Goldstein	Dayanita Singh
Gran Fury	Penelope Siopis
Sunil Gupta	Jiten Thukral and Sumir Tagra
Pieter Hugo	Ultra-Red
John Kapellas	Clive Van den Berg
William Kentridge	David Wojnarowicz

Additional Information

Make Art/Stop AIDS is guest curated by David Gere, associate professor in UCLA's department of World Arts and Cultures and director of the Art | Global Health Center, and Robert Sember, South African artist, activist and public health researcher.

The Los Angeles presentation of Make Art/Stop AIDS is made possible through grants from the Ford Foundation, Andy Warhol Foundation for the Visual Arts, and Peter Norton Family Foundation. Support for accompanying public programs is provided by UCLA Arts, Center for Community Partnerships, Office of Instructional Development, International Institute, Office of Research, and AIDS Institute; UC Humanities Research Institute; UC Institute for Research in the Arts; Flourish Foundation; Artists for a New South Africa; LAUSD HIV/AIDS Prevention Unit; Magic Johnson Foundation; and the Yvonne Lenart Public Programs Fund.

The Fowler is open Wednesdays through Sundays, from noon to 5 p.m.; and on Thursdays, from noon until 8 p.m. The museum is closed Mondays and Tuesdays. The Fowler Museum, part of UCLA Arts, is located in the north part of the UCLA campus. Admission is free. Parking is available for a maximum of $8 in Lot 4. For more information, the public may call 310/825-4361 or visit fowler.ucla.edu.

Related Programs

Opening Night, Sat., Feb. 23, 2008

7:30 pm Performance

Biro by Ntare Mwine

Actor and playwright Ntare Mwine reads selected scenes from his acclaimed one-man play Biro. Based on a true story, the work follows the life of a Ugandan man who was born during the reign of Idi Amin, and who ends up in the U.S., determined to survive despite being homeless, alone, and HIV positive. Mwine has appeared in numerous television shows and films, including the 2006 thriller Blood Diamond.

8–11 pm Late Night at the Fowler

Exhibition preview, DJ music by Jeremy Sole's Musaiics, in-gallery puppet performances, complimentary desserts and cash bar. RSVP recommended: 310/206-7001 or email fowlermembership@arts.ucla.edu.

Opening Day, Sun., Feb. 24, 2008

1 pm

Flesh & Blood

This hip-hop dance-theater piece about teenagers in Los Angeles and around the world shows how HIV/AIDS has affected all our lives. Created by Kevin Kane and his cast of twelve. Location: Glorya Kaufman Hall room 200, adjacent to the Fowler. $6. Tickets and information: 310/794-9208.

2, 3, and 4 pm

Exhibition Tours with curators David Gere and Robert Sember.

5-5-5 Fowler Museum at UCLA to present Make Art/Stop AIDS Feb 23-June 15, 2008

2:30 pm

Griots in the Gallery: Is it OK to Touch?

This poignant puppet performance addresses the discrimination faced by people who are affected and infected with HIV/AIDS. Developed especially with middle school and upper-elementary school audiences in mind, this program offers honest, accurate, age-appropriate information that addresses the human rights of people living with AIDS.

Thurs., Mar. 6, 2008 7 pm

Fowler Outspoken Lecture with Douglas Crimp: Action Around the Edges

Renowned art historian, critic and AIDS activist Douglas Crimp discusses "pre-AIDS" New York from a chapter of his memoir about the proximity and simultaneity of artistic and sexual experimentation in the declining industrial spaces of 1970s Manhattan. Crimp rejects claims that the experimentation of the period led to the AIDS epidemic. Following the lecture, a moderated discussion featuring Crimp will explore the current state of art and AIDS activism.

More programs in Spring 2008. Please see our web calendars for details @ fowler.ucla.edu.

-UCLA-